

“Vision”

Vision is a quality that is lacking in people. Most tend to tread through life thinking only of the next day and what activity they may amuse themselves. But vision is one of the most important parts of life. Without vision, one cannot dream to achieve goals. Without vision, one cannot set before himself a path to follow. Without vision, one cannot see.

But what is vision? Vision is the result of looking beyond the present and into the future. Vision predicates the goals one sets within his life. Vision builds up the plan for what one intends to do. One must map out a plan for life if he intends to succeed. A plan requires that someone try to see what he can do with what he has, and what he can plan to do in the future with what he has. One must take what he has currently, and set smaller goals before the main end result. These smaller goals require one to think outside of his current shoes and plan for where he wants to be in his future shoes.

But one cannot set goals blindly. He must take utmost care to place his goals where he knows he can attain them. If goals are placed haphazardly, one might not be able to achieve the goal he could have had he planned. Vision makes sure that one is able to carefully pinpoint where the goals should be placed. More importantly, vision supplies the ideas to where the necessary tools are for completing the goal.

One also cannot have vision without responsibility. The two qualities go hand-in-hand. Without responsibility, vision is as the lofty dream, but usually develops into a nightmare. Responsibility makes sure that one thinks about the consequences of actions to reach the quotas of his goals. Responsibility gives vision thought. One must think as he sees. Anyone can see something, but if one does not think about the results of chasing the goal, the actions of the person, and the capabilities of the person, that vision will blur, until one cannot see the original vision, and ultimately gives up on the goals.

“Vision”

The consequences of going through life without vision are great. With vision comes responsibility, and without vision one has neither. People without vision tend to deny responsibility. Responsibility is often placed on someone else’s shoulders, and the visionless man tries to lay the blame of his failure on others. People without vision also despise those who do have vision, because those with vision tend to succeed. Unlike those who dispose of responsibility and vision, a man with vision will continue in the attempt to succeed. If a man with vision fails, he will get up again and try until he conquers the obstacle.

But an even greater consequence lies without vision. The absence of vision can create despair because it makes that person believe that he has no direction, and has nowhere that he can go. Visionless people are miserable, because they have no plan for their lives going forward. And if one does not seek to look forward, he will wallow in his misery.

Vision comes from a desire to look ahead and plan out life. Vision is the trait of one who is responsible, tactical, and strategic with life. One who maps out a plan for his life goals will more likely achieve those goals than the one who does not and instead lives his life day-by-day, moving with the ups and downs of life. Vision is a determiner of whether or not someone will have the principle necessary to get through life. If one has no vision, then one has no chance of a healthy quest to realize his ideas, his hopes, and his dreams. And as dreams are, the visionless man’s dream will fade from memory with the new norm of acceptance, the acceptance of no longer moving forward.
